Some of you may be wondering, "Why are we even writing about an iPad application?" If nothing else, the iPad is the perfect computer replacement. You don't need to think about your computer or smartphone. You can use any app you want without having to think about how to connect it all to the Internet. iPad Air or iPad Pro, the choice is yours! Even with a zero-configuration option (the startup screen), you need to be online in order to use Photoshop. And even if you're online, you need to be connected to test features. Activation will fail if you run the program in a remote location, and Adobe warns that you can't install the software to your internal hard drive. PSD files can be imported, exported, and viewed by other applications. Share for Review is one of Adobe's efforts to make it easier for Photoshop users to receive, and give, reviews without leaving the Adobe suite. Each digitized image in the collection, whether it's a batch saved in Lightroom or an individual image, is stored as a Photo. By default, the application permits you to save a Photo to the library and also save a copy as a File. If you save the File, Aperture will make certain that the File is tagged appropriately and link it to the Photo if one even exists — both in the Photos app and in Photos. However, since the File is separate from the Photo (which, as we'll discuss, can be destructive), Aperture can't successfully forward the File to Adobe. What was intended as a simple, non-destructive version of the File simply becomes another Image. To do that, we must use the app's new alternative to Save: Share for Review.
